Comments:

This typey, young stallion is one of a very short list of proven Silver Dapples in the Morgan Breed. Silver Dapple is a dominant dilution gene that affects only black pigment, with an added affinity for lightening the mane and tail. So, in Connor's case, with him being a Bay horse - his mane and tail are diluted to an almost white color and the black on his legs is lightened to a chocolate brown. By breeding to Unconventional, there is a 50% chance that the resulting foal will also be a Silver Dapple. Like all heterozygous silver dapples, Connor will pass on his silver gene to an average of 50% of his offspring, and he can sire bay silvers (like himself), brown silvers (if the mare contributes a brown Agouti and Connor does not pass his bay Agouti) or black silvers. Connor was evaluated for shipped semen in 2008 with very good results. His first foal is expected this spring, check the website for updates and photos.
