Alliance Stud is a multi-faceted training, breeding and broodmare facility on Todd's Point Road, Simpsonville, KY. Dr. Scott Bennett of Equine Services, also in Simpsonville, was one of the early pioneers in embryo transplantation and breeding technology. Dr. Bennett was the first to do an inter-species transfer by transplanting a zebra embryo onto a domestic horse. Now his expertise is centered on the American Saddlebred industry.

Because of the huge demand for specialized breeding services at Alliance in 2001, Alliance Stud has expanded with a new advanced breeding facility and laboratory.

Alliance manager, Danette Musselman, is responsible for training and showing the show string for Alliance clients. She also keeps the show mares in working condition while they are bred, embryos flushed and transferred without missing a step in their training.

Alliance's full-range services also include training young horses for futurities and performance classes, finished show horses and amateurs riders – plus a wide range of high-tech procedures including stallion and mare evaluation and management, semen transport, shipping and transferring embryos, diagnosing and treating reproductive problems and sports medicine.

The technology and services available at Alliance allows horses to be managed by professionals virtually all their lives – from conception to the show ring. Seven-day-old embryos are viewed under the microscope; fetuses are checked by ultrasounds. After birth and pasture life, the horses move into the training phase and then on to their careers, all guided by Alliance.

"I like all horses," Dr. Bennett says, "but I have always been intrigued by the Saddlebred as a top-of-the-line athlete. The breed is always pushing for new heights in performance, and there have been many physical changes over the years. Breeding to improve the qualities needed for athletic performance is a must."

Alliance stands the Saddlebred stallions WC Belle Reve's Renaissance Man, WC Sire General Steel, Giovanni Villani, Heirogance & Attitude, RWC Sire My Magical Moment, Nocturnal, RWC Oceanfront, Manhattan Design, Only Man In Town, WC Sire Rifles and Roses, CH The King Of Highpoint, and Ultimate Asset; and Hollybrook Stage Rage, Morgan.
